Winter carnival in trouble

by Andy Holloway

If Minden residents want a winter carnival this year then they should be prepared to act fast.

The Minden Kinsmen have been running the carnival since the early 1970s, but the organization has informed Minden council that it is pulling out.

Council has responded to the challenge by setting up a special meeting on October 27 at the Community Centre to discuss whether or not a carnival will be held. If enough residents and clubs come forward to offer their help, Minden will have a carnival at the end of January, if not then the carnival dies.

Deputy-reeve Lewis Stevens is optimistic that the residents will pull together and keep the "worthwhile and important attraction" alive.

"I think that come the end of January there will be a winter carnival and it will be better than ever," said Stevens.

The winter carnival was originally run by a group of citizens and not a service club. It was turned over to the Kinsmen Club for many of the same reasons the Kinsmen are giving it back - the need to breathe new life into the event.

For the past few years the carnival has not attracted a large crowd, although the poor weather could have something to do with that. Last year the event was held on one of the coldest days of the year.

"Come the end of January there will be a winter carnival and it will be better than ever"

Plant life

There were plenty of volunteers to help Minden IGA plant 100 trees at the Minden Fairgrounds on Saturday including four year old Kyle Brown, his younger brother Brock and his father Stan who works at the IGA. Among the other volunteers included township councillors Jeanne Anthon and Lewis Stevens, Lions Club members and the grandchildren of the late Joe Dollo. The trees were donated in the memory of Joe Dollo and a plaque was placed in his name at the grounds. The tree planting was part of a province-wide effort by IGA stores to plant 13,000 trees.

Cuts in store as hospital deficit climbs

St. Joseph's Hospital board is blaming the tiny Minden satellite for almost half of its financial shortfall this year.

The hospital, which is based in Peterborough, is facing a $314,000 deficit and the Assistant Executive Director says $145,000 of that is due to cost overruns at the 9-bed Minden outpost. In addition, the Haliburton satellite is being blamed for $53,000 of the deficit.

A press release from the board says the hospital will be aiming to balance its budget by December. The board has already chopped more than $1 million from its budget, but more cuts are needed. Executive Director Frank Lussing says steps will be taken to minimize the effects on services and staff as the hospital works to eliminate the deficit.

The deficit forecast for the Minden satellite is surprising in light of findings in a recent operational review. The review, which was instigated by then MPP Dennis Drainville, says Minden and Haliburton would be financially sound if

St. Joseph's shared its funding increases with the satellites.

Lussing, however, says this approach would be unfair to the Peterborough hospital. "We disagree with equal apportionment" of the Ministry of Health funding, he said. He says much of the funding is specifically earmarked for services provided through the Peterborough hospital. Sharing that money with the satellites would not be fair, he said. "We can't see for the life of us why some of this funding should go to Minden."

Regardless of the funding question, the main obstacle at the Minden hospital stems from its escalating expenses. Lussing notes that expenses in Minden are up by 6.65 per cent while Haliburton's are up just 0.6 per cent and Peterborough's have been reduced by 2.4 per cent.

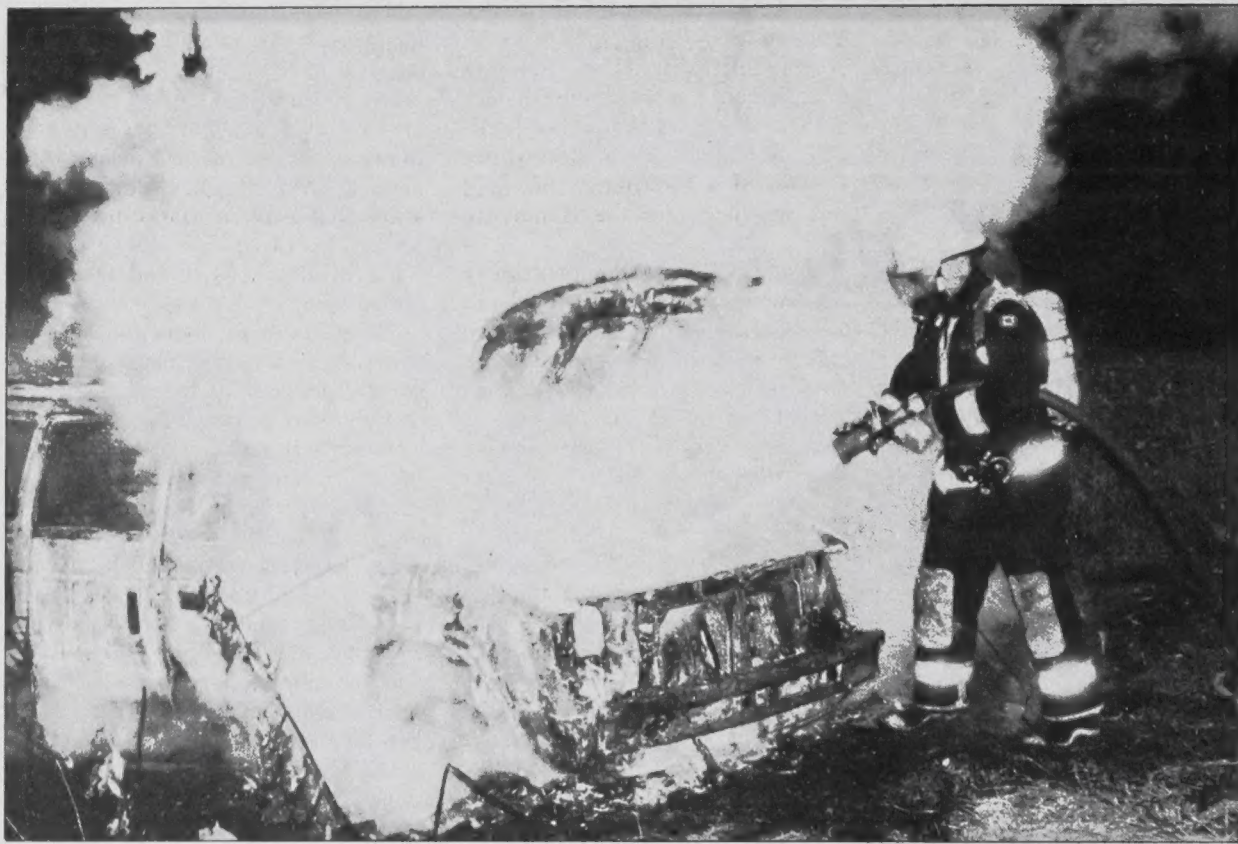

Meanwhile, the Peterborough hospital is also absorbing the bulk of the ministry's funding cuts. While the Peterborough hospital is coping with cuts of 2.14 per cent, cuts to Minden and Haliburton are just over 1.5 per cent.

So far, the financial problems have not had an impact on the services provided through the satellite hospitals, says Lussing. However, he is not prepared to promise this will not change in the future.

Lussing says the hospital has to come to terms with the limited finances.

"We can't expect that life will go on as always." He says there will be changes to the operation of the satellite hospitals, but these changes will be "transparent to the public."

Stanhope firefighters extinguish a blaze that destroyed a Dodge Caravan stolen from Elstone Motors Thursday night. Suspects questioned in connection with the fire were later arrested regarding an unrelated crime.

Suspects arrested in theft case

Police have arrested two men in connection with at least one Hali-burton break and enter after a witness to the crime recognized one man in a Carnarvon restaurant.

The witness, who asked not to be identified, said he saw the suspect leaving a Hali-burton business around 4 a.m. Friday. He recognized the same man in Rudy's restaurant around 11 p.m. Friday.

The police were called and a group of alert patrons kept the two suspects chatting until officers arrived.

The two men had been questioned and released by the same officers earlier that evening in relation to a suspicious vehicle fire involving a Dodge Caravan stolen from a driveway in Lindsay sometime Thursday night.

The two were also being questioned in connection with a string of break and enters in the Carnarvon area Thursday night in which money, food items and large quantities of cigarettes were stolen.

OPP did not release the names of the two suspects involved in the arrest.

Carnival could be cancelled

In a letter to council Kinsmen president Jim Carrell states that it has been a pleasure to serve the community by hosting the carnival, but it is time to move on. "We feel that our decision not to participate should not mean the death of the Carnival but rather a fresh beginning, bringing it back as a community event as it used to be."

Carrell says he is confident that local citizens will respond and keep the event alive. The Kinsmen have taken good care of the funds for the event through the years. When they first started they were given $1,600. They are giving almost $4,800 back to the township to be used to finance the carnival.

The winter carnival is one of two major attractions in Minden during January, the other being the Sled Dog Derby which has been moved back a week and will be held January 22, 23 in an effort to make sure there is enough snow on the ground.

Buyers Beware

by Russ Duhaime

An advertising scheme gone wrong has left several Highlands businesses with nothing to show for their investment.

Business owners feel they have been ripped off after paying hundreds of dollars for advertising in a newsletter that is unlikely to be produced. At least six businesses in Minden and Haliburton paid up to $300 for advertising space this summer, but the woman who promised to produce the direct-mail publication has left the area without producing anything.

The same woman sold advertising in Huntsville last year and left town with an estimated $25,000 in unfulfilled promises.

Police have been notified, but they say it is unlikely that fraud charges can be made. Instead, those who want their money back will have to go to small claims court.

Pat Campbell, from Campbell's Flowers in Minden, is one of the Minden store owners to invest in the advertising scheme. She bought advertising space in the spring from Jennifer Carson of Advant Advertising and Marketing and paid $275 for space in a newsletter that was supposed to be mailed to homes throughout the county.

Campbell had heard rumours that Carson was not to be trusted, but she said Carson was very convincing. Carson even showed her a copy of a newsletter she said was produced for the Huntsville area.

Campbell said the newsletter was supposed to be distributed in the fall, but when she called to check on the progress she discovered that Carson had packed up her office in Haliburton and is now believed to be working in Bancroft. When Campbell later contacted a colleague in Huntsville, she realized the rumours were true. The sample newsletter that Carson had shown Campbell was never distributed.

"I think it's fraud," said Campbell. "She sold me something she knew hadn't been off the ground."

Still, police are doubtful they can prove fraud. Detective Al Cronk from the Huntsville OPP detachment says fraud is very difficult to prove. In order to make a case for fraud, police would have to show that people were intentionally ripped off. "In Huntsville, we can't prove intent." He says it looks more like a decent business venture that went bad. Carson is

"obviously running a very poor business," said Cronk, but that doesn't make a case for fraud.

In Haliburton County, the investigation is just beginning. Many of the businesses that have handed over cheques don't yet know that Advant Marketing has packed up the office in Haliburton's Midtown Mall and moved out of town.

Jean Wittman, from the Midtown Mall, says she has received several phone calls from business owners who are trying to contact Carson. Wittman's name was attached to some of Carson's literature and now she's taking some of the flack for this mess. Wittman, however, is probably the biggest victim. In addition to the advertising she purchased, she is also owed about $500 for phone bills and two months in rent.

Wittman says it was easy to get taken in by Carson. "She's good, she's smooth, she's credible. How stupid we all were."

Constable Mike Landry agrees it is very hard for people to avoid getting ripped off. Landry, who is the community relations officer for the Minden OPP, says the best defence is information. He advises people to ask questions, ask for references and don't pay until the goods are delivered.

Teen killed in holiday crash

A 17-year-old Blackstock man died in a head-on crash near Norland Monday. Three others received minor injuries in the accident which involved four vehicles.

Andrew Avis was driving south on Highway 35 just north of Norland when he was hit by a northbound car, driven by Bill Henderson, 53, of Scarborough.

Police report that the Henderson vehicle crossed the centre line and struck Avis's car head on.

The Henderson vehicle then continued on and struck two other vehicles.

A passenger in the Avis car, Angela Lymburner of Oshawa, received minor injuries. She was treated at Minden Hospital.

Richard Jackman, 37, of Scarborough and Tracey McMullen, 26, of Brampton were the drivers in the other vehicles. They were taken to Ross Memorial Hospital for treatment of minor injuries.

Henderson is scheduled to appear in Lindsay court on November 4 to face charges of impaired driving causing death and taking a vehicle without the owner's consent.

A head-on crash near Norland claimed the life of a Blackstock teen.

Actor steals the show in Lindsay

Doyle broadsides opponents at tiresome Lindsay forum

by Russ Duhaime

John O'Reilly was sporting a brand new tan.

Lorne Chester's blush seemed too bright to be real.

Barry Devolin and Dennis Drainville were far too well rehearsed with their lines.

The "media representatives" recited mundane questions to the candidates, who, in turn, recited their answers. The questions, or course, were delivered to the candidates weeks in advance so as not to catch anyone off guard at this televised forum.

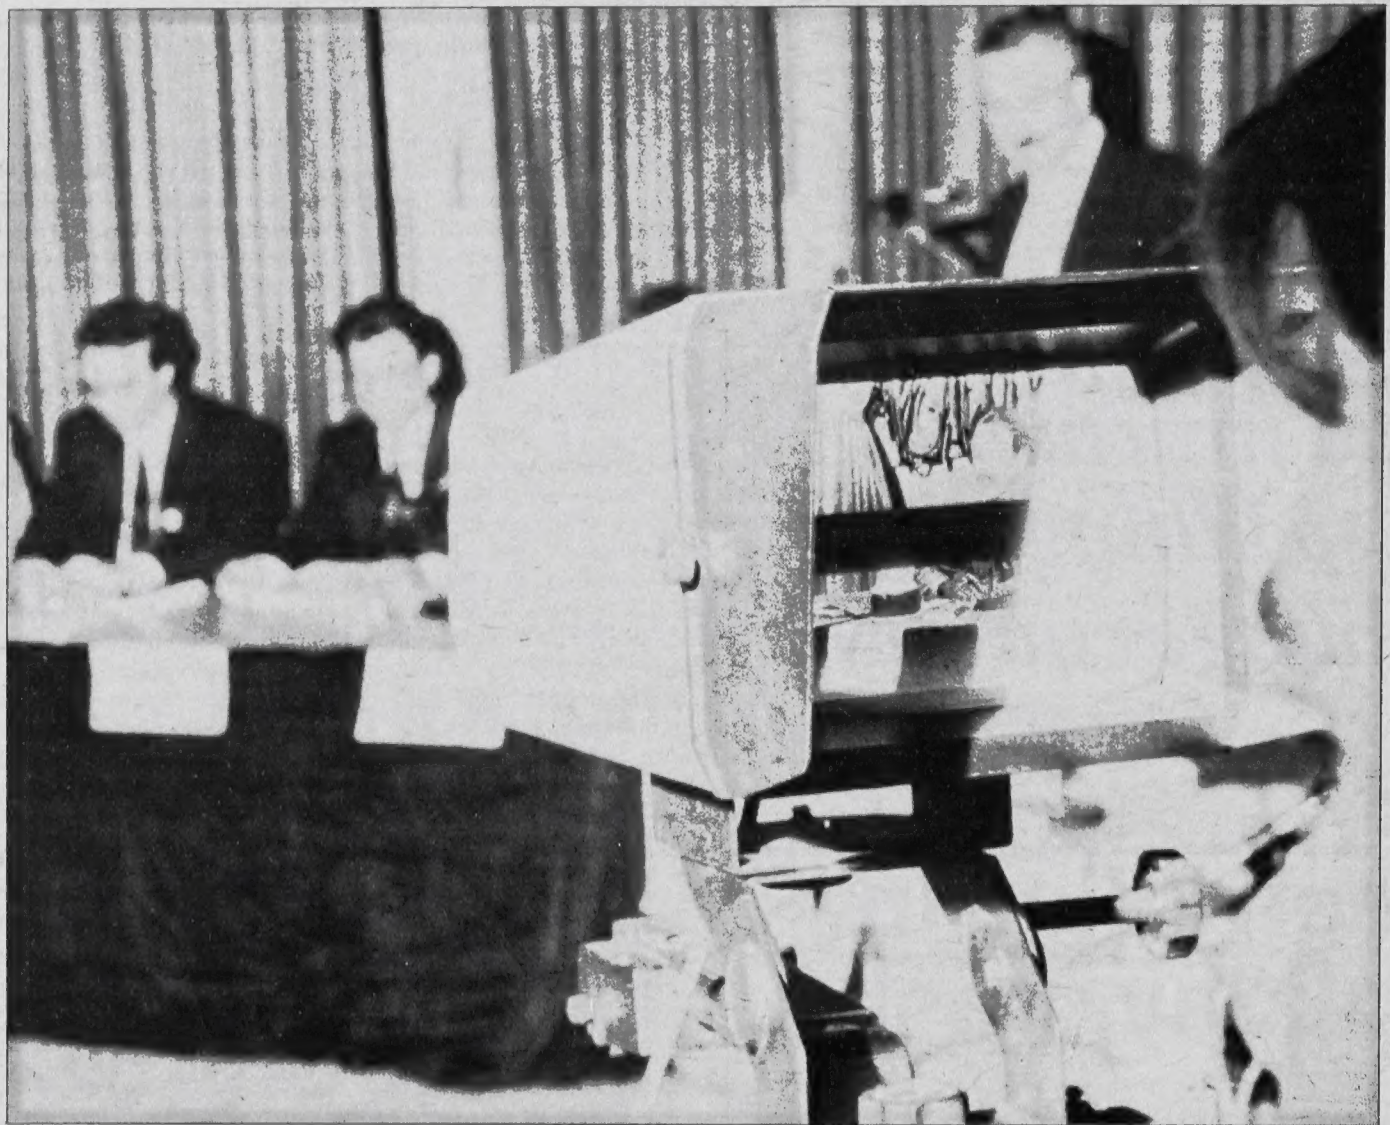

Even the audience joined in the theatrics of Thursday's candidates meeting in Lindsay. "Three . . . two . . . one . . . cameras are rolling," chirped the Cable TV director as the 100 people in the terraced seats clapped enthusiastically for the benefit of the television audience.

Meanwhile, some of the campaign workers relaxed in the staff lounge, grumbling about how repetitive these forums have become.

Ironically, the only candidate who didn't seem to be acting for the cameras Thursday was the actor in the field. And, when Martin Doyle tried to break this highly-orchestrated event wide open, the moderator stepped in, shut off the microphone and instructed the National Party candidate to take his seat.

Lindsay Cable TV viewers who nodded off or turned the channel before the end of the televised forum may want to tune in when the show is aired again this Tuesday.

Doyle, a professional actor, upset

The cameras zoomed in on surprised candidates during Doyle's spoiled attempt to close the evening with a bang.

the tidy apple cart with his final two-minute closing. He caught his seven opponents flat footed when, instead of spewing party rhetoric, he posed a question.

Candidates who earn 15 per cent of the vote will have a portion of their deposit returned to them, Doyle explained. Considering the emphasis on deficit reduction, he asked his fellow candidates if they would be willing to donate that money back to the government.

The candidates restlessly squirmed in their seats. Members of the audience were visibly delighted by the prospect of unguarded crossfire. The cameramen eagerly obliged when Doyle asked them to zoom in on the blushing Conservative candidate for his response. Chester bit back with a question of his own, and just when things were heating up, the moderator doused the flames.

The all-too-brief exchange was the topping slice of bread on an air sandwich. Doyle laid the foundation for this political snack with his opening speech, which was actually his response to a question posed a week earlier by Liberal candidate John O'Reilly.

During a Lindsay radio debate, O'Reilly implied that Doyle's candidacy is a ploy to further his acting career. Doyle responded Thursday by noting the tremendous amount of charitable work that is done by people in the acting profession.

"So, no . . . running for political office in Victoria-Haliburton won't advance my career as an actor," said Doyle. "But, it has allowed me to emulate the spirit of public service that I so admire in my actor friends."

Obviously annoyed that his profession has been made a factor in this campaign, Doyle went on to poke fun at the professions of his fellow candidates.

"As Canada grinds to a halt and closes for business -- as so many light manufacturing companies have done in this riding -- and the Free Trade Agreement and the proposed NAFTA take their toll, the NDP candidate can organize some unemployed union carpenters to board up Canada; and the Liberal real estate agent can take the listing and put up the for sale sign and take the commission when Canada is sold; and the PC lawyer can draw up the papers and notarize the deal.

"And when the country is breathing its last, the independent minister and the Christian Heritage Party candidate can deliver the eulogy, and the retired Canada Party candidate can bellow 'O Canada' -- without the French verses, of course -- at the top of his lungs, and the political science Reform graduate can explain to the men, women and children of Canada in unemotional, academic terms why their country had to die."

Business as usual for Reform campaign

During the school year, Dart Clark teaches business subjects to students at LCVI. His summers are often spent honing his own business skills while working for the Canadian National Exhibition.

So, when it comes to an election, it's business as usual for the Reform candidate's campaign chairman.

No one was better prepared for this election than Barry Devolin's Reform team. The candidate was selected almost a year in advance of election call and the eight-person campaign team, headed up by Clark, has been ready and waiting since the start of the summer.

"Barry asked me to be his manager back in June," says Clark. "We wanted to organize the structure over the summer and have things ready."

Ready they were. Office space on Lindsay's main street was booked. Signs were prepared well in advance and everyone knew precisely what their tasks would be when the writ was dropped.

"It all fell into place" when the campaign began, says Clark. "We were organized, and so far there have been no problems."

In contrast to the frenzied, make-shift appearance of other campaign offices, the Reform headquarters look like that of a long-established business. The tidy office is a reflection of the Reform campaign -- calm, clean, and organized.

Clark's role is chiefly that of a coordinator. He oversees the work being done in each of the eight portfolios, and he says the bright people working on the campaign make this task easy.

"People have said we've run a good campaign," says Clark. "That's because people are doing their jobs."

Although this is Reform's first showing in a federal election, Clark is not a newcomer to the political scene. Like his candidate, Clark is a former Tory supporter with experience in three federal and provincial elections. He worked in two of Bill Scott's campaigns and on a provincial campaign before losing his enthusiasm for the political process.

By 1984, however, Clark was so frustrated with government arrogance that he began looking for an alternative to the Conservatives. He says the not-so-free vote on capital punishment, the patronage and the hated GST prodded his flight from the Tories.

"Elected representatives are living with party politics, towing the line," he says. "They're not representative." He joined Reform in 1991 because he believes this new party is different.

"People want to be represented," he says. "They want to hear about the issues and how they will be handled." He says Reform offers this.

Reform team:

Barry Devolin's campaign is a highly-structured affair. These folks have been ready to go for months and now that the campaign is underway, manager Dart Clark says everything is falling in place.

Federal Election '93

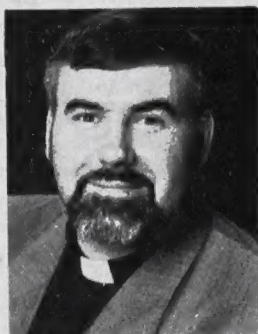

Each week The Times will ask each of the major candidates to respond to a question. This week's question is: If you had a choice between saving social programs for seniors and reducing the deficit which would you prefer?

Dennis Drainville, Independent

Your question is based on the totally false premise that social programs are the cause of the deficit. The delivery of social programs could be vastly improved but the source of the deficit lies elsewhere.

According to Statistics Canada (1991), 50 per cent of the federal debt that lies at the root of the deficit was due to tax breaks to the corporations and the wealthy. There is $8 billion in uncollected corporate taxes. 90,000 profitable Canadian companies paid no taxes on profits of $27 billion. In the 1950s corporations carried 50 per cent of the national tax burden. Today it's down to less than 10 per cent. It is obvious that major, corporate-supported parties are perpetuating an enormous hoax on the public during this election by equating the deficit with spending on social programs.

As an Independent MP I would not remain silent and let pensioners be the victims of such dishonesty.

Cathy Vainio, NDP

Canadians do not have to make that choice. The federal government can reduce the deficit by the following means: tax corporate earnings at 1985 levels - $6 billion, place a minimum tax on the 100,000 profitable corporations which pay no tax - $1 billion, end the large corporations tax exemption of capital gains - $2 billion, eliminate corporate expense accounts - $1 billion, end private trusts - $1 billion, abolish the Senate - $60 million, and stop the flow of Canadian tax-subsidized workplace pension funds and RRSPs onto international money markets where they are used to create jobs in third world industrializing countries, but not a single job in Canada. Every 10,000 jobs in Canada realizes $1 billion in tax revenues. If the 1.6 million Canadians registered as unemployed were at work today the net gain to our national economy would be $26 billion or $17,500 per worker.

Martin Doyle, National Party

This question is not unlike, "When did you stop beating your wife?" It's a tricky one to answer. Unfortunately, Canadians have been sold a bill of goods. We now believe that there is only an either/or situation between these two situations.

The reality is that if we had the appropriate fiscal and monetary policies in place, together with a fair taxation policy where large trans-national and foreign-owned corporations paid their fair share of Canadian taxes, we could maintain our social programs as well as address the deficit and debt. The deficit and debt will not disappear quickly without a huge human toll. Rational deficit and debt reduction is much more realistic.

Don't be ridiculous is the cry of the naysayers! We say it can be done. So, who are the real "reformers"? On October 25, cast your ballot for sensible change.

Lorne Chester, Conservative

I am not in favour of solving our deficit problems on the backs of any one segment of our society. My goal is to give seniors and others who benefit from our social programs better service, not less service. At the same time I do not mean to diminish the importance of the deficit. It is one of the most dangerous problems facing this country because if we can't get it under control we may lose (whoever is in power in Ottawa) some of those very social programs we all value so highly. I think the key is in our understanding that many of our social programs are not working the way they were meant to work. The face of Canada has changed greatly since these programs were put in place, and the programs themselves have not kept pace. We want to look at all our social programs and see what can be done to build a social network of "opportunity" for all Canadians. Seniors are not our target; sustaining a quality of life for all Canadians is.

John O'Reilly, Liberal

A government must never just look at its bottom line in determining priorities. The human cost of its decisions must always be included in the equation. Once that human cost and need has been identified and calculated, that program should be prioritized along with all other government activities. If a government elects not to fund all its programs due to funding restrictions, then it should fund only those programs with the highest priority. The Canadian public has already indicated what it defines as its highest priorities. They rate Medicare higher than helicopters; they rate maintenance of Old Age Security higher than pensions for MPs; and they rate job creation ahead of selling airports to political friends. It doesn't come down to funding social programs or cutting the deficit. It comes down to ensuring that the needs of the public are prioritized higher than the needs of the politician.

Barry Devolin, Reform Party

Did not respond to the question.

Environment is ignored

Environmental issues, once cornerstones to every party's election platform, have lost their luster in this federal election.

Employment and deficit reduction are taking the spotlight while the environment rarely earns a mention.

Only one candidate in this riding responded to a survey conducted by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. Liberal candidate John O'Reilly responded to the 12 environment-related questions.

O'Reilly agreed to support all but two of the efforts promoted by this group.

Only 20 per cent of all those candidates polled responded. The responses showed general agreement among parties on all questions.

Voters need to act quickly

With just one week left until the federal election, voters need to act quickly to get registered on the voting list, says Elections Canada.

The revision of the voters list ends this week, along with the deadline for applying for or voting by special ballot. The revision period for changes to the voters list winds up at 6 p.m. this Wednesday.

Voters unable to cast their ballots at the advance polls or on October 25 may vote by special ballot, but their application must be received by Elections Canada by 6 p.m. Wednesday. Everyone voting by special ballot must return their ballots to Elections Canada by 4 p.m. this Friday.

Elections Canada offices are open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. They are also open on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., and Sundays from noon to 4 p.m.

To contact Elections Canada, call 1-800-267-VOTE (8683).

If you're a student who will be 18 or older on Election Day, October 25, pick up an Elections Canada leaflet from your Student Association. It's all about exercising your right to vote.

Federal Election '93

Out there on the fringe

by Andy Holloway

Elections are about choice and this year's federal election offers more choice than ever before. Not only are there five major parties instead of three, but a number of other nationally organized parties are in the race to get their ideas out as well.

Often called the loony left or the righteous right, the fringe has become more populated than ever before. In Victoria-Haliburton there are three - The Canada Party, Natural Law Party and Christian Heritage Front.

With so many parties vying for attention the fringe players - even if they take only two per cent of the vote - could prove fatal to one of the local leaders' chances. At least one fringe player, The Canada Party's Charles Olito, who lives in Woodville, believes he has a realistic chance of actually winning.

"I honestly think I'm holding my own so far and this riding is wide-open," says Olito. "I'm not swamped, but I am getting enquiries so that's good for me."

The Canada Party was formed last February and has candidates in six provinces. Unlike many fringe candidates, Olito has an extensive political background running as a provincial Conservative in 1987 and narrowly missing the Tory party's federal nomination in 1984. His switch away from the Tories was because he was tired of the "lies, lies, lies" that he says the Tories have committed during their nine years in office.

"To me I honestly could not have lived with myself if I sat out this election. I had the choice to run or not and I made the choice to run because it was either time to put up or shut up and I don't think I could shut up," says Olito.

Perhaps because the party is so young there are elements of other parties' policies in its platform. The Canada Party wants to eliminate official bilingualism (Reform), kill free trade (NDP), repeal the GST (Liberal), create jobs by giving money for municipal public works (Liberal) and allow MPs to vote away from the party line (Reform).

The Christian Heritage Party, on the other hand, has a platform unlike any other party, although it has some economic beliefs in common with the Reform Party. Local candidate Don Waterhouse from Highland Grove says he would have run for the Reform Party nomination except he doesn't believe all important issues should be decided by referendum. "There are certain moral issues that are non-negotiable," says Waterhouse.

One such moral issue is abortion and the CHP is definitely pro-life.

"We've bought into the left-leaning liberalist illusion and the humanist propaganda that has defined life outside of a Judeo-Christian context. If we can do it with abortion at the beginning of life then it will not be long before we may decide to do it with those members who are old in age and not considered productive or meaningful," says Waterhouse.

This is Waterhouse's first stab at political life. He has worked as a police officer, truck driver, in sales, as manager of a finance company and currently runs a group home in the county.

Waterhouse says the party knows it has little chance of winning, but it still wants to get its message out.

"I would say we are in a cultural war, and at this time the Judeo-Christian ethic is being outrun and being beaten. It's no longer in the public square. Canada's beliefs and traditions and ideals in civic as well as religious life are losing their power to shape the private and public lives of countless Canadians."

This, says Waterhouse, does not mean the party wants to exclude those from other cultures. People from other countries are welcome and should be allowed to maintain their cultural heritage, but he says those people are attracted to Canada's heritage and all Canadians should recognize the supremacy of the Judeo-Christian God.

The CHP even has a job plan for this riding which includes tree farming, cashing in on the scenic beauty the county offers retirees and a need to encourage high technology industries.

The Natural Law Party has endured the most jokes at its expense. There are, however, a number of people who believe in the party's goals. The NLP has more people running in the various ridings than all but three parties.

The Natural Law candidates have two main policies they wish to implement, and unlike other parties they don't mind if their ideas are stolen says local candidate David Hetherington from the head office in Ottawa. The first one is of course the widespread introduction of transcendental meditation into rehabilitation and prevention-based health care.

"We advocate the formation of a group of people practicing meditation and we have research that shows it will create a large reduction in social stress which will lower crime and will have an effect on society at large," says Hetherington.

The party believes it can reduce the amount of illness by 50 per cent over three years. The money saved from this would go towards offsetting the lost revenues that would result from abolishing the GST. Hetherington says $35 billion annually can be saved as well as a great deal of pain and suffering as a result of the party's prevention-based healing.

The other main keystone is to form an all-party government. "Because of the party system much of the energy of the government is spent on adversarial politics. We want to implement an all-party government that would use the best talents from all parties and the private sector," says Hetherington.

Some of the party's other policies include supporting pollution free industries and transportation, simplifying the legal system, supporting families so that parents can stay at home and tend their children and expanding the consciousness of students using meditation.

As for whether his party can win one of the 231 ridings in which there are Natural Law Party candidates, Hetherington says winning is not the most important thing.

"The spirit of having an election is that it is a forum for bringing ideas forward which provide solutions to the country's problems. If you bring forward some ideas which get the attention of the people or the winning party then you have also won in that way."

Deficit magic

The administrators at St. Josephs Hospital have been watching too many Natural Law Party campaign ads, it seems. They see Doug Henning wave a his magic wand over the deficit, watch it disappear in a puff of smoke, and think of how nicely that would work for their own deficit.

Now it seems St. Jo's is planning a bit of it's own magic. It has taken a $314,000 deficit and made more than half of it disappear. The trick, though, is nothing more than smoke and mirrors. The deficit isn't really gone, it has just been shuffled over to Minden, where we fear the real disappearing act is about to be performed. We're afraid St. Jo's is trying to make the Minden hospital disappear. Again.

This is how it works. St. Jo's gets funding from the Ministry of Health to operate its three hospitals (Peterborough, Haliburton and Minden). In keeping with inflation, the ministry ups its funding each year. (Don't blink, now, here comes the trick). St. Jo's has not passed along the increases to Minden.

We recognize that reduced provincial funding for health care services is causing problems for hospitals throughout the province. However, we are also aware that any cuts in services at the Minden and Haliburton Hospital, because of their size, will represent major setbacks.

So far all of St. Joseph's cost-cutting measures have taken place at the Peterborough hospital. Services in Minden and Haliburton have been largely unaffected. However, now that a $145,000 deficit has been pinned to the Minden hospital, things are likely to change.

According to Coulson and Associates, the consultants who examined health care services in this county, there is no room for cuts at the Minden hospital without eliminating services.

St. Jo's has promised that any changes in function at the Minden hospital will be "transparent". However, if they're aiming to eliminate the deficit here without us noticing, then magic is certainly in order.

There is, however, a way of generating significant savings while enhancing services in Minden. The Coulson report says that by building a new Minden hospital adjacent to Hyland Crest, annual savings of $190,000 are possible. If this is the sort of change St. Jo's have in mind, we're all in favour.

Attacks on Dennis Drainville not warranted or wanted

Editor:

There seems to be a campaign to attack Dennis Drainville and the media is allowing itself to be a part of it. This is not what newspapers of good community character should allow.

All writers hit the same curious road. Drainville is damned for changing jobs, changing homes and changing his political philosophy. Presumably, all the writers are living in the houses where they were born, work at their first and only job and never voted for more than one party in their life. True or false?

One writer even has the idea that the severance pay which will accrue to Drainville should be donated to something. Has that person travelled recently to Montreal to picket the home of Mulroneys and demand that Brian and Mila pay back the $500,000 food and drink bill for their personal entertaining? And how about Mulroneys' million-dollar farewell party, laughingly called a final Prime Ministerial world tour?

The most cowardly part of those letters is that, with one exception, none of the writers identified their political suasion. These are not letters to the editor, they are blatant elections ads.

I have not read much about Drainville and never met him, but I am going to vote for this former NDPer. Whether he still holds the same philosophies or has been persuaded to think otherwise, I don't know. But, if he is an enemy of Bob Rae, he is my choice.

I was a lifelong Liberal and I voted that way until Trudeau's first run and then did so with my fingers crossed. After his arrogance, his social programs, never since. And with the abysmal list of Tory leaders, who but a dyed-in-the-wool Tory could ever vote for them again?

Nowadays, with the parliamentary system we are stuck with the worst rabble of hog-toughing slop eaters that the country has ever seen. Politics used to be a clean profession. Now, with very few exceptions, it is a lottery win and damn the electors.

Minden hospital staff saved the day

Editor:

To those people who think Minden should not have a hospital readily accessible, may one of your own never need emergency care.

Last Friday night (Oct. 8) after arriving at the cottage for the weekend, our son took ill with severe chest pains. He was taken to Minden Hospital, where Dr. Holliday-Rhodes told us he'd had a major heart attack. The doctors and staff took prompt action and stayed on his case for two and a half hours to stabilize him.

Their prompt action and know-how pulled him through and later that evening he could be transferred to Lindsay. Their fast and caring action will be remembered always.

To the staff and Dr. Holliday-Rhodes, keep up the good work. You are very much appreciated.

A political ode to an Independent Dennis Drainville

Editor:

If you're thinking of voting for Kim,
Her chances are getting quite slim.
But the Bloc and Reform
Don't conform to the norm,
And old crooked-mouth's still looking grim.

Now Audrey has something to say,
But she never will learn from Bob Rae.
So if you're at sea -
Between you and me,
Independent's the choice for today.

Europeans go hog wild for Yankee bikes

Here's an interesting little news squib in my daily paper — it says a chap in the town of Skien, Norway, is so infatuated with American motorcycles that he has legally changed his name to Harley Davidson.

Imagine loving a hunk of machinery so much that you name yourself after it.

I don't think I'll tell my pal Rick about this story. Rick had a wee bout of lovesickness over Harley Davidson motorcycles too. But I think he's over it.

In fact, I think the merest mention of the name might send Rick into a relapse involving toilet bowls, dry heaves and some very nasty language.

It all happened last year when Rick had a brain wave.

Those of us who know Rick have learned to head for fallout shelters whenever he has a brain wave. This is a guy who took a flyer on Moscow real estate just before the USSR broke up.

This is a guy who bought shares in Canary Wharf just before the Reichman's bailed out.

This is a guy who puts money on the Toronto Argonauts.

"It can't miss," said Rick.

Yeah, well. Still, Rick said his Harley Davidson caper was a natural gold mine. The idea

Black'n White

by Arthur Black

was to buy a vintage U.S. cycle in Canada, then sell the bike at an obscene profit and float back to Canada on a mattress of hundred dollar bills.

"It can't miss," said Rick. "Europeans, they're crazy for Harley Davidsons. They'll pay 30, 40 grand for them, no questions asked."

As usual Rick was about half right. He bought a Harley in Canada, shipped it at great expense to Rotterdam and proceeded to ride across the continent.

He didn't get very far. The bike broke down. Again and again and again. It broke down in Holland. It broke down in Belgium. It broke down in Germany and France and Andorra for crynouloud — which is so small there's barely room to ride a motorcycle, much less break down.

But Rick didn't really mind all the breakdowns. Because it was raining anyway.

And sleeting and misting and fogging and generally being the worst European summer in a quarter of a century. It was so cold and so wet that nothing ever dried out. Especially if you were camping.

Which Rick was. Between motorcycle breakdowns. It's okay, thought Rick, shivering and cursing and handing over his Mastercard for the umpteenth time. "It's okay because once I get back to Holland I'll unload this two-wheeled albatross for 35 or 40 grand and fly back to Canada first-class on the Concorde."

As with most of Rick's plans it didn't quite work out that way. Oh, he eventually chugged into the outskirts of Rotterdam on his wheezing, smoking bike. He found a Harley lover willing to pay $20,000, not $40,000 for the bike. Rick was all set to shake hands when the Dutchman said, "Of course der vill be also tax."

Tax? What tax? Well, it was a Dutch government tax, specifically created to stop foreign would-be entrepreneurial hot-shots like Rick from cleaning up. In the case of Rick's bike the tax would come to 9,000 guilders.

Which meant that Rick would be selling the bike for $2,000 less than he paid for it.

Rick's back home now. The Harley sits in a crate on a dock in Rotterdam, destination unknown. Rick doesn't think about it much any more.

Rick's more interested in this new scheme involving computerized vineyards. You see, he met this guy at a Harley shop in Marseilles who told him that for an investment of just a few hundred thousand francs...

Chester attacks lame Tory ads

Lorne Chester, the local Tory candidate, has done something right. He attacked his own party's television advertisements which show Liberal leader Jean Chretien in a series of unflattering photos. Having exhausted all other possibilities, it seems Kim Campbell has decided to criticize Chretien's facial deformity caused by a childhood illness.

Chester says he phoned national HQ and requested that they stop airing the ad. Chester tells us he "finds this type of politicking totally distasteful." We agree, not everyone can have milky white shoulders like Ms. Campbell.

Speaking of Campbell

Chester is not the only one to flee from the national party leader. Tories all over the country are flocking to escape her as she continues to campaign. Local Tory bigwigs in Saskatchewan refused to appear with Campbell whose own popularity, which was once twice as high as Chretien's, has fallen behind the Liberal leader.

Media hounds

Proving that even the media has its watchdogs, local Dennis Drainville supporters and former journalists Munroe Scott and Gerry McCarthy have filed a complaint with the Ontario Press Club against Lindsay This Week. It seems the publisher wrote some rather disparaging comments about Drainville's independent time with the provincial government. The two complainants were offended by the editorial and have asked the paper to apologize.

Pot out of luck

A Montreal Gazette reporter covering Kim Campbell's campaign was recently arrested for possession of marijuana. The drug was sniffed out when his bags were routinely checked before boarding the Campbell jet. Later on it was revealed that the reporter had four different drugs - marijuana, hashish, cocaine and magic mushrooms. No word if the reporter will be considering politics in the future.

Sign of the times

The local NDPers have finally put up their signs - last among the five major candidates - but they're certainly eye catching. Black and orange signs in October bring to mind a certain Halloween feeling. Perhaps the NDP has a witch's spell ready to cast over voters on October 25. If it doesn't, the party could be wiped out in Ontario.

Fax Wars VI

It was a slow week on the fax lines, which was a good thing because The Times was down to its last roll. The National Party made a valiant attempt to end the Liberal domination of the fax lines, but came up three short as the Liberals sent eight fax sheets. The Tories were third with four sheets while the Reformers and Dennis Drainville had three each. The Liberals won the overall title sending 96 faxes. Congratulations go to the local Grits.

In the soup

One of Cathy Vainio's faxes was a letter from former NDP rival Yolande Brown who complained that she awoke one morning to find a PC Lorne Chester sign posted on her lawn in Sunderland. No doubt the sign was placed there by teenage pranksters as even the Tory campaign couldn't stoop that low. Ms. Brown, an avid supporter of the NDP, did thank Lorne though - her husband needed some nice tomato stakes.

Goodbye

As this is the last installment of The Harpoon all the candidates and their parties can breathe a sigh of relief. Don't forget to vote.

U.I. payments are for a reason

Editor:

I am appalled by Barry Devolin's statement that "seasonal workers should leave the county to find work." Who will shop locally for the eight months that we are out of town? What kind of wages must we make in order to maintain our homes in Haliburton and rent a place out of town or even pay the gas to commute? Where will our children go to school. Lindsay? Huntsville?

It's unfortunate that most work in Haliburton is seasonal but I, for one, will not leave my home, family, stores and town to work elsewhere and I doubt there is work anyway. Perhaps we should all go State-side.

In 30 years of full-time, well-paying employment I have made my contributions to UIC and welfare. And while I would far rather be working today than be unemployed, I refuse to leave.

Will there be no UIC or income tax deducted from our seasonal pays under a Reform government? We pay thousands of dollars over the years for life, house, car and unemployment insurance to be covered when the need arises. Should we drop all of this as well and eliminate insurance companies? How many more will be unemployed then? That's the $64,000 question.

Good luck in Ottawa!

Haliburton field hockey teams make Kawarthas

Both Haliburton Highlands field hockey teams have made it to the Kawartha tournament finals to be held later this week.

The seniors wrapped up an impressive regular season with a 2-1 away victory over Kenner Collegiate last Tuesday. The win gave the seniors a record of five wins and one loss for the season which was good enough for second place in their pool.

Jen Bradford and Lindsay Francis were the goal scorers in Haliburton's win.

The seniors will be back at Kenner this Thursday for the Kawartha tourney.

The juniors also made the Kawartha tourney after beating Trinity Collegiate 1-0 last Tuesday. Jess Wallace's goal was the only one of the game. Mandy Harrison had another strong goaltending effort to get her third straight shut-out. The juniors' final position was to be determined, but they have made the finals.

In games played the previous week, the juniors grabbed two points with two scoreless ties - one against Peterborough and one against Westwood. The seniors split two matches winning 2-0 over Lakefield and losing 1-0 to Thomas A. Stewart.

Bantam Wolves select Minden hockey player

The Central Ontario Wolves AAA hockey organization has claimed another Haliburton County player - Andrew McKelvey of Minden.

McKelvey will be playing on the Major Bantam squad. Last year he played for the Minor Bantam team in the Wolves' first season. He is the only county player on the bantam team this year.

It takes a big commitment to play for the Wolves, not to mention a lot of money. All the players are responsible for obtaining their own sponsorship to help pay for the costs.

Anybody interested in helping out the local players who made the Wolves, to cover their expenses, should contact the players' families.

Speed and power coach Craig Taylor shows students how the laws of physics will help them become better athletes.

Speeding students

by Andy Holloway

Succeeding in sport relies as much on the mental process as it does on athletic ability.

At least that's what "power and speed" consultant Craig Taylor told 25 students at Haliburton Highlands last Saturday.

"What I want to do is get them thinking about what they're doing. Often athletes get a bad rep for being a bit 'Uhhh'," says Taylor.

"I want to teach them things that will be useful in any sport and, if they're using their heads, later in life."

Taylor was invited to the high school by physical education teacher Tim Davies to help students improve their speed skills. Taylor was here for two days with each day being broken down into three segments. Students paid $20 for each clinic.

Students may have felt silly performing some of the basic moves, but it will no doubt improve their performance later on. Taylor uses big concepts like "rotational physics" but demonstrates, rather than theorizing, why it will help make people faster. Knowing the rules of physics is important because physics determine the extent of what can be done. "You can't defy the laws of physics," says Taylor.

Taylor has helped athletes improve in many sports including football, water-skiing, and bobsledding.

He has also helped former Haliburton track and field star Lesley Tashlin earn a bronze medal in the hurdles at last summer's Nationals. Tashlin was also present at the clinic to help Taylor demonstrate his techniques.

Senior Redmen clobber Weldon

Tailback Andy Bacon tallied 377 yards as the Haliburton Highlands Redmen football team continued their domination in the senior Kawartha West beating I.E. Weldon Wildcats 49-6.

Along with his impressive yardage totals Bacon scored three touchdowns including the go-ahead score in the second quarter. Four other Redmen scored majors while quarterback Jay Hughes added two two-point converts and Jamie Keefer converted three touchdowns.

For the first time all season the Redmen were actually challenged by a football team. The Wildcats, who had beaten Lindsay Collegiate 19-0 the previous week and were on a high, came to play. In the first quarter the Wildcats tied up the score after Hughes rumbled into the end zone to give the Redmen a lead.

The score remained tied until the second quarter when Bacon scored the first of his three majors. Bacon then scored again followed by a touchdown by Peter Van Leeuwen and the Redmen never looked back. With the conversion attempts the Redmen took a 28-6 lead into halftime.

In the second half the Redmen added three more touchdowns to make the final score 49-6. Peter Brohman, Bacon with his third TD, and Chris Dobbins were the scorers.

The Wildcats did put up a fight for a while and for the first time all year the Redmen were involved in a tie game other than at the start of the game. Weldon also scored the only touchdown the Redmen have given up all year. The Redmen have outscored their opposition 190-7.

Hughes threw for over 100 yards in the air and picked up good yardage on the ground as did Van Leeuwen and second stringer Dobbins. Keefer added three single-point conversions to round out the scoring.

Soccer seniors clinch west title

Redmen undefeated during regular season

Onward and upward. Haliburton Highlands senior soccer team has made the Kawartha finals after wrapping up the Kawartha West division with an impressive undefeated season.

The Redmen won their final game of the season against the Lindsay Collegiate Spartans 1-0 to win the division. Since the Redmen were undefeated a playoff was not necessary to decide a champion.

The Spartans were the only team with a shot at the Redmen, but had to tie or win the game. They came close, very close. Redmen coach Walter Tose said the Redmen scored with just two minutes left in the game to squeak out the win. Tai Gerrard headed in a cross from Darren Parsons for the winner. Goalie Bruce Milne originally started the play and also played a solid game in net for the shut-out.

"I was never worried about them scoring," said Tose. "I was just worried about whether or not we would score. LCVI was much improved and we were a little flat."

The Redmen, however, won and will play in the Kawartha tournament on October 28 at LCVI. They will probably play either Crestwood or Adam Scott, with the fourth team in the tournament being Port Hope. Tose has organized an exhibition game in Port Hope to give his team an idea of how good they are.

The tournament works like this: win the first game and you secure a berth in the finals and a berth in the Central Ontario finals to be played the following week. Lose the first game and you play a consolation match. The Redmen senior team has never won the Kawartha and has never made it to the Central Ontario finals either.

Redmen one win away from second straight title

final game of the regular season this Friday in Lindsay. A win gives the Redmen their second straight undefeated season and the Kawartha West title. LCVI is the only team to have come close to beating the Redmen this year, losing only 20-0 two weeks ago in Haliburton.

The junior Redmen also kept their undefeated streak alive beating Weldon 28-0. The juniors face the same situation as the seniors do this week at LCVI. A win gives them the Kawartha West title for the second straight season, but a loss forces them into a playoff to decide the division winner.

The junior team has not been as dominant as the seniors this year, but have still rolled up 130 points in five games so far this season. The defence has given up just eight points and combined with the offence should give them a good shot at advancing the next step this year.

If the Redmen win in Lindsay or the playoff then they will play the best team from the Peterborough area to decide the Kawartha title.

Last year both the seniors and juniors lost to a Peterborough team in the Kawarthas.

Junior soccer Redmen edged out by Weldon

One win was the difference between a chance to win the Kawartha West division and second place for Haliburton Highlands junior soccer team.

The juniors finished second after losing 3-1 to I.E. Weldon in Lindsay last Wednesday. The lone goal for the Redmen was scored by Nathan Gibbons on a nice pass from Nathan Stephenson. Despite the loss the Redmen should feel very pleased with their play, particularly after losing several veterans to the senior squad.

"The whole team played very well and they just came up one victory short of winning the league," said coach Bob Penfold.

Earlier in the year the Redmen had tied the Wildcats 3-3 two weeks ago but lost 2-0 in the season's first mini-tournament. If the Redmen had won the final game they could have become winners of the Kawartha West and earned a place in the Kawartha finals.

In their other games the Redmen proved superior to the Lindsay Collegiate Spartans winning 5-0 and 3-2. The Spartans finished last in the three team division which shrank after Fenelon Falls called it quits due to social contract cutbacks.

Dan Pavlov stands with one of his trainees after a successful hunt. Pavlov operates a pheasant hunting farm in Carnarvon and trains hunting dogs.

Hunting for pheasant in someone's backyard

by Andy Holloway

The body's muscles, all pointing in one direction, tense. Not a sound or movement is made for several minutes until a quick pounce flushes out the prey. "Blam", and all is silent again except for the thrashing of a dog through the bushes carrying Dan Pavlov's dinner.

Pavlov - that's Pavlov as in the original dog trainer - runs Pheasant Ridge Game Farm and Kennels. As the name suggests the farm is used for several purposes. Pavlov trains and breeds hunting dogs and for the past eight years his farm has doubled as a hunting ground where hunter and dog can prove their mettle.

Controlled grounds, where you know for sure your prey is somewhere, may not sound like much of a challenge. Fish farms, after all, give people a chance to catch their dinner without venturing too far into the wilderness. Pheasant Ridge is something different. Far from being tightly controlled, the farm has 200 acres on which hunters can roam. There are several hundred more acres at Pavlov's disposal, but he says he never has to use them. Hunters today, he says, would rather shoot than hunt.

"I see a lot of people who sit in their trucks, smoking cigarettes and drinking coffee just waiting for a pheasant to run off my property and then they shoot. This is what many of today's hunters do and they give the real hunters a bad name," says Pavlov.

"If they have to walk for three hours without shooting something then they start to curse me. You'd be surprised how little distance they can walk, even the 20 and 30 year-olds can't walk very far."

The thrill of hunting, not just the killing, it is in the chase. The end result is the same, but the chase demands skill and determination on the part of both the dog and its owner. A successful chase, though, requires a good dog and good dogs are hard to come by says Pavlov.

He draws a parallel between other sports like hockey and hunting. "How many kids play hockey every year, and how many Gretzkys are there? It's the same with dogs."

Pavlov's namesake, the great psychologist, was able to train his dogs to do what he commanded, but the tasks were relatively simple. A good hunting dog has to have certain characteristics that are instinctive. Even if these same instincts are taught to a lesser dog, the results are uneven, says Pavlov.

"What I look for in a dog is a lot of spirit and a great propensity to point," says Pavlov showing off Bianca, a young energetic setter. Bianca later escapes her pen while Pavlov and another more experienced dog Briar are demonstrating the hunt. Rather than being angry at Bianca, Pavlov says it shows the great potential the dog has for the hunt.

A few random thoughts on the hunting season

There's something special about this time of year.

To those of us who go afield in pursuit of game, be it small game, big game, waterfowl or upland game birds, (or any combination of the above) there is no time during the rest of the year that compares to the autumn hunting season.

Hunting is often referred to as a sport. I disagree. To me a sport is an activity where a person or group of people try to do better than an opponent. That isn't the case with hunting, at least it isn't the goal of a true hunter. The true hunter is not competing with anyone to see who can bring home the most of any game species within the limits of the Game and Fish Act.

The youthful among our ranks sometimes strive to prove their mettle, their marksmanship, their ability to find game, by working harder to put more game in the larder. The really good ones soon learn that the true measure of success can't be counted in pounds of meat in the freezer. It is the experiences — the sights, sounds and even smells — that we add to our memory banks with each trip afield that really matter.

The many dinners we hunters provide for our families is only a small fraction of the total experience that hunting is.

It's difficult to explain to a non-hunter (and nearly impossible to explain to an anti-hunter) the thrill of being a part of the natural order of things. Human beings are natural predators. We are at the top of the food chain.

Anyone who thinks hunting is easy has never given it a serious try. Some people have beginner's luck, but those who consistently bring home the venison by legal and ethical means are savvy woodsmen and woodswomen. They take more than a passing interest in the game they pursue and they are in their quarry's habitat studying its habits more than they are afield with gun or bow in hand.

(Anyone who takes game illegally or without the highest ethical standards is not a hunter in the true sense, but an uncouth slob at best and a criminal at worst.)

Some people are born to be hunters. Others acquire a passion for hunting through the experiences and enthusiasm of family members or friends.

You don't have to be a hunter to appreciate the outdoors and its fauna. But hunters enjoy experiences that other outdoors enthusiasts often don't.

While sitting on a deer stand with my crossbow last fall, I enjoyed the antics of three raccoons, one of which came within inches of joining me in the blind. On the same stand, a red squirrel scampered across my bow, which was in my hand at the time. Dressed in full camouflage, neither the squirrel nor the raccoons knew I was there.

And then, there were the deer! On my first day of bow hunting last fall, a doe walked out into an alfalfa field about 35 yards in front of me. She was obviously aware of my presence and she pulled out everything from her bag of tricks to try and identify me. She would put her head down as if to eat and after a second or two, snap her head back up, riveting her stare right on me, ears cupped in my direction. After trying that ploy at least 20 times, she resorted to the old stamp the front foot trick.

That didn't work either, so she finally gave up and started grazing her way out into the field, apparently satisfied that the camouflaged figure in the fence row posed no immediate danger.

Fifteen or 20 minutes later, the doe fixed her gaze across the field. I looked to where her attention was focused and there were two forklorn bucks trotting in her direction. I could almost taste the venison steaks! The two bucks joined the doe and the three of them grazed contentedly for another 10 minutes while I sat quietly hoping one of the bucks would wander within range.

Lady Luck was smiling on the deer that day. Before either of the bucks came within the effective range of my bow, a group of people out for an afternoon stroll happened

Breaking a million rules

Members of the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School stage band received a lesson in breaking the rules Friday afternoon.

The students were taking part in a jazz workshop featuring the John McLeod Quintet, a jazz group which appeared later that evening in a fund raiser for the Haliburton Highlands Guild of Fine Arts. The afternoon session concentrated on improvisation, an integral part of the jazz idiom. McLeod told the students that the difficulty in launching into improvised jazz was that all the "rules" students learned in the study of music went out the window.

"Up to this point you've been learning how to make music by following the notes on the page and the accepted practises. Improvisation is the art of learning a million ways to break those rules," the musician said. McLeod and his quintet demonstrated how they made music happen by stepping outside the pre-set boundaries. They then invited the students to follow them down the road to improvisation. Working with just four notes, the students played solo improvisations, and to reinforce their tentative efforts, McLeod and the band then repeated their musical efforts with embellishment.

"You must tap the creative forces within you and let them flow," McLeod told the band members.

As music teacher Tom Regina pointed out, the students were initially reluctant to embark on the "risking taking" musical venture, but once they heard the quintet respond to their efforts, they quickly abandoned their shyness.

Juno Award winner John McLeod demonstrates his technique to the delight of HHSS stage band trumpet players Rhys Gray, left, and Damon Smith.

HHSS stage band musicians watch as members of the John McLeod Quintet performs during a workshop Friday at the high school. Band members include,

31 years on the job

Fire chief Don Booth calls it a day

by Andy Holloway

Thirty-one years is a long time to work in any job. Particularly when it is one that offers low pay and is highly dangerous such as a volunteer fire fighter. It's even worse if you start out terrified of fire like Donald Booth did back in 1962.

"I was very badly burned in a fire four years before that. I was petrified of fire, just petrified, because I didn't know what it was about," says Booth.

Nevertheless, on Christmas Eve, 1961 Booth was called in to help remove some propane tanks that were in danger of bursting during a fire at a Minden restaurant. Three months later he gave in to some arm bending by his brother-in-law, a member of the force, and joined the fire-fighters.

Now, over 31 years later, Booth is retiring from that same force as fire chief. A feat he was honoured for at a special dinner last Saturday night. The reasons for his retirement are many, but the main one is he wants to spend time with family and is tired of carrying around a beeper everywhere.

"I have three little grandsons and the same wife (Diane) as 36 years ago and I want to spend some time with them. It's become more demanding with all of the paper work and training, it's not just putting out fires any more. I always said that when the right people were around that I would leave."

Despite officially retiring six weeks ago Booth is still working for the department as an advisor and a trainer. He is also helping to smooth the transition period while new chief Bill Hogg takes over the 20 man crew.

Fire fighting seems to run in the blood of Booth's family. His father Reginald, a former reeve of the township, bought the first pumper truck the township ever had in 1951. Booth recalls that his father received $500 from the province to buy a truck and then spent four days driving the refurbished open-cab truck back from Woodstock - in February no less - because he was unhappy with the lack of fire fighting equipment the area had. The truck was kept in the township garage. In 1978 a proper fire hall was built and is in use today.

The fire fighting tradition continues in Reginald's grandson who has been with the North York fire department for nine years after serving as a volunteer with the Minden department when he was 18-years-old. At that time Booth says the department was in need of some youth because the force was aging. Today the force is made up of much younger volunteers, says Booth, but the camaraderie is pretty much the same as always.

"I've enjoyed working with the local council, the fire fighters and their wives and families. It's been a family experience more than anybody has an idea it is. I've worked with a helluva lot of good people over the years."

Booth leaves behind a force that is

"I've enjoyed working with the firefighters and their wives and families. It's been a family experience more than anybody has an idea"

Retiring Minden fire chief Don Booth stands beside one of the trucks he helped the department acquire two years ago. Booth is leaving the department after 31 years.

much changed since he started and even since he became chief in 1986. Where there was one reworked truck there are now four decent vehicles including Booth's pride and joy - a triple combination pumper that cost over $100,000 in 1991.

"When I became chief there was a lot of things I said I wanted to do and I've done them. I always wanted a truck that had everything I felt it needed to have for this area and two years ago we bought it."

And where there used to be a shortage of young talent, now there is a whole pool just waiting for their chance to be trained. Beginners serve a one-year probation, but the training never stops and fire fighters are now required to upgrade their skills and abilities like any other job.

The one thing that hasn't changed is the need to be quick, intelligent and on call at all times of the day. All this for $8.50 an hour, $10 for the first hour. Booth earned an extra $100 a month from council as a retainer and he was able to build his other full-time job - with the township's sewage department - around his fire department duties.

Although the job of chief brings many additional hassles, Booth says he is going to miss the work and his friends on the job.

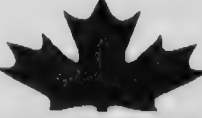

"I certainly am going to miss it in that way, but not as much as I thought I would. It's still early so it's hard to tell. But this is as good a crew as I've known to work with so I felt pretty good about leaving it to them."

by. They saw the deer in the field and one of them decided to see how close he could get to the deer before they ran off. That's the way hunting goes sometimes.

The fall before, I had a similar experience when a doe came down a ridge to within 20 yards of me during the rifle season in November. I didn't have an antlerless tag so she wasn't fair game.

I was sitting on a chair in plain view and the doe didn't see me until she was three-quarters of the way down the hill. When she stopped, there was an ironwood tree about three inches in diameter a couple of feet in front of her nose. She alternated peering around the tree, first on one side and then the other, trying to decide whether or not it was safe to continue where she was going. After a couple of minutes of the peek-a-boo routine, she gave the foot-stomp a try to see if I would move and give myself away. Finally, after four or five minutes of indecision, she decided it was safer where she came from, trotted back up the hill and disappeared over the top.

While sitting on deer stands I've had whisky jacks come within an inch or two of landing on my hat and I once had a chickadee land briefly on the barrel of my rifle. Apparently it didn't like the feel of the cold, smooth metal and opted for a perch on a cedar limb a foot or two away instead.

The sound of coyotes howling so close and mournful that it makes the hair stand up on the back of your neck; the smell of the drying leaves; the crisp autumn air that seems purer than at any other time of year; the ruffed grouse that seem only to appear when you are in pursuit of other game — these are a few of the things that draw us hunters afield year after year, whether or not we bring home a limit of ducks or a few pounds of chemical-free game meat.

For many, a week in the deer camp is like a tonic for the soul. The stress of every-day life, with its deadlines and responsibilities, is temporarily suspended while we concentrate on less stressful things.

It is unfortunate that those who have the least understanding of what makes hunters tick are the most vocal in their opposition to hunting. To deny me the opportunity to hunt would be like telling me I can't be a Canadian any more. Both are undeniably a part of my heritage.

School board opens budget up

by Andy Holloway

The school board will be opening up its budget process to the public even further than it did last year.

The board's management committee will host a preview-budget meeting to allow the public to see how the decisions are made in advance of the budget being set. The meeting is tentatively set for January 18.

Last year the board opened up its meetings to the public, but received criticism for bringing an almost finished budget to the table for discussion. The County Taxpayers' Coalition complained that more public input was needed before decisions were made and some trustees obviously agreed.

"I feel very strongly that we should have public input on the budget in January," said Lloyd Griffiths (Cardiff).

The meeting would allow business administrator Jim Bradley the opportunity to show how the budget is set and what restrictions are placed on the board by the province. Leonard Salvatori (Dysart) said it is important the public know, the restraints the board faces.

"We're going to be in trouble with expenditures this year with all the cutbacks and the social contract - which will cost us for the next two or three years - so why not let the public know about it," said Salvatori.

Bradley said he would like to hear both positive and negative feedback and noted that last year the board received many positive comments after the coalition slammed the board for wasting taxpayer's money.

Soyers Lake residents want to keep black liquor off nearby township road

by Andy Holloway

The one summer test ban on the dust suppressant black liquor on Soyers Lake Road was a success and the ban should continue says the area's ratepayer's association.

The association convinced Minden council to suspend the use of black liquor on Soyers Lake Road for one summer to see how dusty the road would get. Soyers Lake cottager David Pengelly said only three people complained about the dust this summer. He said 53 people have signed a petition to keep black liquor off the road.

For those who have complained about the dustiness, Pengelly said a system whereby those who want black liquor on the road out front of their home would be accommodated, but most of the road would remain liquor free.

Pengelly presented council with a report from the lake association that shows black liquor is not effective as a dust suppressant or a road binder and is toxic. He said the association recommends that calcium chloride is a better dust suppressant and cheaper. The report concludes that black liquor is not suitable for Soyers Lake Road or similar roads in the township that are highly travelled, have a porous road surface and where there is moderate to high humidity.

"To me it's pretty simple, you don't use stuff that doesn't work," said Pengelly.

Reeve Bern Berry, however, said black liquor seems to work well where he lives on Cox Farm Road.

"To me it's pretty simple, you don't use stuff that doesn't work"

David Pengelly, Soyers Lake resident

"If they don't put something on Cox Farm Road it will be a dust bowl and when they've put black liquor on the road it seems to work."

Pengelly responded by saying such anecdotal evidence is useful, but that studies show black liquor is not suitable. One such report was done by Acres International in 1988 for the Ontario Ministry of Environment.

Minden has been covering its roads with black liquor since road oil was banned four years ago. Both black liquor and calcium chloride are slightly toxic, but Pengelly says the levels of dioxin in black liquor, which are currently well below standards, and other chemicals are worse in the long run because they are bio-cumulative.

Calcium chloride is more expensive for one application. It costs $200 per kilometre to spray roads with black liquor while calcium chloride would cost $1,000 per kilometre. But Pengelly said that since black liquor is not as effective it costs twice as much to achieve the same dust suppressant effect.

Berry said council would take the Soyers Lake report and the Acres report under consideration when it decides how to control dust for next summer.

Flower CHACE

Reverend Brian Plouffe, right, was the winner of CHACE's fall raffle and received a gift certificate from Campbells Flowers as his prize. Plouffe's name was drawn during a recent event at Dave's on 35. He came to the Minden flower and garden centre last week to claim his prize from Pat Campbell. The children here are some of the many who benefit from the programs CHACE provides.

School board has ambitious plans

Eight new classrooms for high school top board's wish list

by Andy Holloway

Eight new classrooms at the high school and six more at J.D. Hodgson will be needed in the coming years to help the Haliburton school board deal with rising enrolment.

Business administrator Jim Bradley will recommend to the school board that it accept those projects as part of its capital forecast for 1995-1999.

Capital forecasts are needed by the Ministry of Education and the board to determine whether long-term future projects will be funded by the province. The province wants these capital forecasts by the end of October and did not give the board a lot of lead time to come up with solid plans.

Bradley noted that enrolment at the high school is growing by "leaps and bounds" and is now up to 672 full-time students. To handle the expected rise in the coming years Bradley said the board will probably have to add eight classrooms to the high school, install a double gym, upgrade the cafeteria and renovate the technical shops. There are already more students than the school was designed for said Bradley.

However, some of the proposals depend on what kind of education programs the board wants to develop. For example, Superintendent of Education Dale Robinson said that an overhaul of the technical programs at the high school is needed. Whatever direction is taken would determine what kind of improvements the shops need. Leonard Salvatori (Dysart) said the current shops are not up to date and need replacing. "If you're teaching something outdated then it's pointless."

To alleviate the over-crowding in the short term the board will probably have to move the portables currently at Archie Stouffer Elementary School to the high school.

Bradley also said that the J.D. Hodgson school will also have to be expanded to accommodate the planned closure of Victoria Street Elementary School. Six classrooms in addition to the two junior kindergarten classrooms and extra washrooms already approved by the province will have to be built to accommodate those students. The school's double gym is big enough to handle the extra students.

The full school board has to approve the capital forecast at its October 26 meeting before it can be submitted to the province.

Haliburton Highlands high school awards night this Saturday at 7 p.m.

Hunting with dogs

Bianca has the instinct to point to her prey, but can only hold the position for a few minutes. Later on, after some more training, she will be able to point for up to 30 minutes without budging. This gives her owner plenty of time to catch up and load a gun.

Hunting in this way on a game farm isn't cheap. Pavlov charges $15 for each bird he releases and another $20 for the dogs and a guide (himself). On the other hand, you know you're going to come back with something even if it takes three hours or so.

Back at the farm the dogs continue to bark, which would drive some people around the bend.

"Most people think I'm crazy, but I guess you have to be a little crazy to like doing this so much."

Stanhope Council Notes

Kennesis River residents want boating speed limit

by Andy Holloway

Council has started the long process of getting an official speed limit placed on Kennesis River after hearing complaints of speeding Seadoos this summer. Reeve Fred Gardner said there are concerns that canoeists, floaters and swimmers are at risk because some Seadoo drivers are speeding around corners, particularly between the mouth of the river and the bridge. This summer a Seadoo ran into a floating log and two people were thrown overboard, but no one was hurt in the accident. Council was given a petition signed by a majority of residents in the area supporting a speed limit.

There are two speed limit signs, but these are not officially recognized. Council has applied to the Ministry of Natural Resources to get a speed limit on the river - a process that takes about two years.

Composters for sale

Minden township is having trouble getting rid of its composters and is asking other areas for help. Stanhope council was asked whether it needed more composters and, if so, to contact Minden township as it has many left-over. Composter sales have not been as high as expected in Minden. Stanhope, has had excellent response selling over 500 of its own composters. The township has under 150 composters left and does not need any additional units. Anyone in Minden wanting a composter should contact the Minden township office.

Ramp improvement

should be undergoing repairs soon, after township staff took a look at it.

One resident wrote to council complaining that the launch was badly in need of repair and that it cost him $60 to get his car and boat pulled up the steep ramp. The township applied to the MNR for a shoreline improvement permit in September and has apparently received approval to proceed. Reeve Gardner said he would prefer to use concrete instead of blocks to repair the ramp. The launch is the only public access point for boats on Halls Lake. There was another one on property owned by Cherokee Lodge, but that has since been closed to the general public.

Tax and donate

Club 35 traditionally receives a donation from the township based on the property tax the club owes. Last year this was in the neighborhood of $1,000 or 50 per cent of the taxes. However, the club appealed the tax assessment and - in a stroke of good fortune - succeeded in lowering its property tax to a total of $1,300. This means the township, which gives 50 per cent of the taxes, only has to pay $650 this year.

Policing meeting

Anybody wishing to help out with a community policing project in Stanhope is asked to attend a public meeting October 30, 7:30 p.m., at the Community Hall. The level of interest shown at the meeting will determine whether a community policing committee will be set up in the township. For more information call Sergeant Doug Bernardi at 286-1431 or Linda Burley at 754-2297.

JOBS, JOBS, JOBS

What they say: The Liberals have a $6 billion dollar proposal which might produce 400,000 short term jobs. But this proposal is dependent on Municipalities and Provinces coming up with $2 billion each to match Federal spending. The provinces and the municipalities don't have it. The Liberals don't have a job creation program. The Reform party doesn't even pretend to have a job creation program. They promise to eliminate the deficit no matter what the cost. The cost to Pensioners will be $3.5 billion, the cost to Small Business will be $4 billion.

What we say:

The only way to create lasting jobs is to build an economic platform which will allow job creators (small business people) to prosper. We will:

- improve access to money for both small business and the farmer
- offer youth business Initiatives to help young Canadians start businesses
- reduce the bureaucracy, and paper work for small business
- streamline taxes to help small businesses
- get rid of waste and downsize government

Emergency home to be built next June

by Andy Holloway

An emergency safehouse for women in Haliburton County will be built next summer.

A commitment to providing such a safehouse was reaffirmed at recent public meetings to determine the needs of women in this county. A one-time government grant has enabled SIRCH to hire a project coordinator, Jude King, who will oversee the project to be completed by next June.

"It won't be a shelter, but rather a house where women and children can stay in an emergency. It will be staffed by volunteers not shelter professionals," says King.

The county does not have such an emergency home although many of the neighboring areas do have such a facility. King says many women do not feel comfortable leaving the area where they live and work and do not want to commute from shelters and homes in Lindsay or Bracebridge. The Haliburton home will only provide emergency housing and is not intended to be a permanent solution for domestic problems.

Funds for the home have been partly raised by a series of benefit concerts held by the YWCA in the county. The most recent concert was held in September and featured Toronto musician Ken Whitely as well as many local performers. The money was put in a trust until the housing project received approval.

There is still a lot of work to be done and volunteers will have to be recruited to not only staff the building, but help erect the building on a site to be determined. In June an "old-fashioned barn raising" will bring volunteers together to put up the house. Local designer Michael Hughes is drawing up the plans for the building.

Besides volunteers, funds and materials are needed says King, because governments will only grant so much money. "With government restraints the reality is we wouldn't get a shelter for a long time if we waited for funding."

King says the project is an "innovative" one and should prove to be fun for everyone involved. (Donations can be made to SIRCH Emergency House Fund, Box 687, Haliburton)

SIRCH will also be recruiting volunteers to provide practical and emotional support for the women and children staying at the home. Recruiting will start in January and volunteers will receive training.

"It is an exciting and innovative project that will provide an opportunity for the community to come together and say no to violence," says SIRCH administrative officer Gena Robertson.

Home support

Donna Pacey, executive director of the Haliburton County Home Support Services, accepts a $1,000 donation from the Minden and District Lions Club. The presentation was made by the Lions 3rd vice-president Al Stott at the Lions dinner meeting last Wednesday.

Environment issues disappear in federal election campaign

So far in this election, environmental issues have been invisible. What has diverted attention from what has been the No. One concern for several years?

Consider this. For most of human history, people lived in a world inhabited by monsters, spirits, gods and forces that lay beyond human comprehension or control. Now scientists and engineers have pierced nature's boundaries to probe the deepest secrets of the cosmos and pushed aside ignorance, superstition and the mystical. But the spirits of the past have been replaced by something just as unfathomable, uncontrollable and frightening. Look at the typical business report (New York Times, Sept. 22): "The stock market fell sharply yesterday, with the Dow Jones industrials sinking by nearly 70 points before recovering to close with a loss of 38.56 points." The market or economy "advances," "drops" or "rebounds" as if it's a real thing rather than the sum total of a multitude of individuals making decisions for myriad personal reasons.

The dictionary defines the word REIFY (from the Latin word RES for "thing") as "to make concrete" or "to materialize." Reification of the economy has given it a life of its own and is no longer connected to people. Thus, on CNN's Larry King Show, then prime minister Brian Mulroney declared that he and other world leaders couldn't be held responsible for the global economy, which is beyond control. So now we tremble before every twitch in the economic indicators as we did in the past when the gods were angry.

The supernatural once existed because they were beyond our control or understanding. But economics is a human invention created to serve people and their communities. Something is fundamentally wrong when people and communities are told they must sacrifice and pay to serve the economy by accepting chronic unemployment levels of 10-to-12 per cent, cuts in social services to reduce the debt and stimulation of JOBLESS economic growth! It is a bizarre shift in social priority that demands that we integrate into a North American economic unit through free trade so that we can better compete in the world market.

But the global economy serves the giant multinational corporations, not people and local communities as revealed in two stories in the Globe and Mail (Aug. 21): Shell Canada "has launched a major cost-cutting program" that will include dropping an unspecified number of jobs while General Electric's Ameritech will cut 1,200 to 1,500 people.

The job cuts enable the companies to become more competitive, even in cases where profits are growing! Shell Canada's actions are "designed to improve pre-tax profit by about $250 million by 1995" an amount equivalent to about $2 a share.

The reports go on to inform us that "layoffs are averaging about 50,000 a month, exceeding the pace of

by David Suzuki

the recession two years ago."

In July, Procter & Gamble announced "it was letting go of 13,000 employees even though profit was rising. It justified the move by saying it had to cut costs to compete."

It's an astonishing state, human beings let go in the name of international competitiveness so corporate profits will increase. Profit is now the economy. If we are serious about "putting people to work" then we need an economics that puts people, jobs and communities first. That may seem naive, but so are our federal and provincial leaders when they run all over the world pleading for investment in Canada.

Implicit in this begging is the assumption that Canada is poor or broke and that wealth can be generated by ceding control over our own resources and industries to foreign investors. We can't manage an economy that is controlled in other countries.

Many years ago, eminent economist Ken Boulding related a useful thought exercise to get an idea of our "real wealth." Imagine waking up one morning and discovering that the rest of the world has vanished, leaving only Canada surrounded by 200 miles of ocean. Would we starve, freeze or lack in human and material resources to maintain the quality of our lives? Of course not. Canadians are among the most fortunate people on Earth.

Applying the same thought exercise to Japan, we see that the Japanese would be plunged immediately into a severe crisis because they lack energy and many resources. Yet economics so grotesquely twists our notions of wealth that the Japanese are considered rich and powerful while we are in deep economic trouble.

Economics is a monster that must be tamed and trained to serve us. There are alternative economic models out there, but to take them seriously we have to get off the warped and destructive economic assumptions being bandied about in the campaign rhetoric of this election.

Exchange student enjoying 'efterarsferie'

Dav igen fra Danmark!

I am writing to you now for the second time, the first letter being almost six weeks ago. I have been in Denmark now for almost 12 weeks, and they have been the most incredible 12 weeks! To me it feels like I have only been here for three, maybe four weeks; I love how quickly time flies. In fact, when I think about it, I have been here for a quarter of my exchange already.

On October 16, I am beginning my first school holiday. It is called the "efterarsferie", and it lasts one week. Everyone at school has been talking about it for the last three or four weeks; like we count down to Christmas, they count down to the efterarsferie.

I am going to Oedense, Vejle and Struer, each for a few days during the vacation. I am going to visit three friends from language school, two from Ontario and one from New York. It should be really fun to see them because we will have lots to talk about and compare.

The last weekend in October is Get-Together

Day from Denmark

by Meaghan Obee

weekend in a town called Holbaek. It is for all the 211 exchange students now in Denmark. It will be great to get to talk to everyone, to see how they are doing, to meet all the exchange students from the southern hemisphere and to see a little more of Denmark.

I'm now involved in a few activities. I go to a school choir every Tuesday (those who even remotely know me, know I can't sing, but here they can't tell because all of the songs are in Danish and the exchange students are the only people who can pronounce the words anyway)). I also go to Rotary every Tuesday night, play volleyball at the school on Wednesdays, and play basketball on Thursdays with the people from my school who have been in Canada or the U.S. or are here on an exchange.

I also play mixed doubles badminton at the school on Thursdays, and run six kilometres three times a week with a girl from the school. The running is preparation for 10-kilometre run that all the Efterskoles in Denmark do on the last day before Efterarsferie. I don't think I will be running because it is during school, but practicing together is a really good way to get to know this girl well.

Lots has been going on in Minden, I can see. I am receiving my Times subscription and can read up on all the happenings. (Just five weeks after it happens, because of the mail delay. For instance, I just found out about the white water races and they happened at the beginning of August!).

My Danish is improving every day, and I am beginning to feel almost fluent. The only problem is that the more Danish I learn, the more English and French I forget. I can not believe how much I now have to concentrate when speaking and writing English to make sure I don't leave words out or say things backwards.

All in all, everything here is going really well. The food is good, language is coming along, I've made lots of friends at school, and I am always busy. I love Denmark and am so glad to be here.

Hyland Crest still in need of more flowers

Nothing much happened Sunday till Sunday night when Reverend John Burgess took the evening service. Thank you John.

Monday morning we had fitness and Kathy Woods conducted crafts in the afternoon making place mats for Thanksgiving dinner.

Tuesday chapel service was taken by Reverend Brian Parker. We truly thank Rev. Parker. A few residents finished making place mats in the afternoon and Corrine helped a couple of tables of people to play euchre in the evening.

Wednesday Doris took a bus full of residents to Stop 35 for lunch. The volunteers were Bonnie Fullan, Lorraine Swinson, Liz Alrutz and Kathy Woods. We all enjoyed the lunch and the hospitality very much. Afterwards we went for a drive to Birch Tree Corner,

Senior League

by Winnifred Barnum

then to Highway 35 and back to Kawartha Dairy for ice cream donated by Lorraine Swinson. We sincerely thank Lorraine for the ice cream and the other ladies for their help. The leaves were beautiful.

In the evening the Grandfathers 4 came to entertain us with a happy evening of music. Thank you Bill Payne, Eldon Deacon, Don Burch and Don White.

As usual there was the tea party put on by the Minden Institute Ladies • Annie Kernohan, Bea Berry, Maude Coulter, Mary Cox, Jean Cox, Joyce Hewitt, Jean Lacey and Jeanne Sears. They served a delicious tea. We thank them from our hearts.

Friday had happy hour with Connie and Mike Biagi and Frank Faulkner providing the entertainment, and Doris at the piano. During the music a draw was made for turkeys for Thanksgiving. The tickets were sold by Alice Rivers and Lillian Davidson. The winners were drawn by Alice Rivers, Lillian Davidson and Judy Stevenson. The winners were Imelda Briggs (#2), Al Boury (#50) and Alice Morrison (#12). Happy Thanksgiving to everyone.

Remember: If you are digging up or moving your perennial flowers and plants this fall we at Hyland Crest would appreciate if you would donate some to us to beautify our home. Any plants you could spare may be given to Jean Robson of the Hyland Crest Auxiliary. Thank you.

Haliburton dams to be set for coming winter

The week ending October 4 saw a drop of less than 1 per cent on the Haliburton area lakes of the Trent-Severn Waterway. At 52 per cent they exceeded the October 1 target level by 2 per cent. This was also higher than the 50.3 per cent on October 5, 1992 before the very wet conditions last autumn caused those lakes to rise again. By November 25, 1992 the levels had risen to 60.6 per cent despite running much above normal flows on the Gull and Burnt Rivers.

The Kawartha Lakes ran much of the past week just a little above the full level despite a flow increase to about 67 cubic metres per second being discharged at Lakefield. The October mean flow for the Otonabee is 58.

In the next few weeks many of the dams in Haliburton will be set for winter and following that several dams on the canal route will be set by December 1. Over the winter the usual lowering of the larger Kawarthas is planned.

This is the final TSW report this year. It will appear again next spring when the recreational season is here once again.

Resident refuses to give up

Staunworth Court residents are gradually putting summer behind them and looking forward to fall and winter activities. Len Trodd hates to give up and has vowed to keep on with Wednesday barbecues until Christmas.

Some of our folks took a trip in the early fall - Doris Foster enjoyed a bus trip into the United States, Fern Donnelly had a super trip to Calgary visiting an ex-Army girl friend and reliving days spent in England and Sylvia Howard had a great week in Delta, near Brockville, visiting a nephew and his family. A visit from a niece and her husband from near Detroit made the time even more enjoyable. Sylvia was also able to visit old friends in Smith Falls and Brockville.

At the recent meeting of our Social Club, Fred Knight and Maxine Cross agreed to serve another term as president and secretary respectively.

Activities have pretty much been put on hold for the next week until the fate of the Blue Jays is decided.

Some of our residents have not had a healthy summer. Doris Moore spent a few days in hospital. Margaret Horsely, Mark Vasey, Henry Howe, May Minto and Jean Marsh have all had a few "under-the-weather" days and Harry Cowen has just returned from a few days in hospital. All of us wish our neighbors good health for the coming months.

And finally: Today is the tomorrow we worried about yesterday and all is well.

This poem was brought in by one of our readers:

Where can a man buy a cap for his knee
Or a key to the lock of his hair?
Should your eyes be called an academy
Because there are pupils there?
In the crown of your head, what jewels are found?
Who travels the bridge of your nose?
Could you use in shingling the roof of your mouth
The nails at the ends of your toes?
Could the crook in your elbow be sent to jail?
If so, what did he do?
How can you sharpen your shoulder blades,
I'll be darned if I know, do you?
Can you sit in the shade of the palm of your hand
And play on the drum of your ear?
Do the calves of our legs eat the corn on our toes,
Then why doesn't it grow on the ear?

ANNOUNCEMENTS

TRAINING OPPORTUNITY W.H.M.I.S.

W.H.M.I.S. (Work Hazardous Information System) is a Canada-wide system to provide employers and employees with information about the hazardous materials they work with on the job. Legislated by both federal and provincial jurisdictions, this system came into effect on October 31, 1988. W.H.M.I.S. does not really burden employers with new responsibilities. Instead, what the "right-to-know" system does is clearly spell out how employers can fulfill those responsibilities that exist under current laws. Most provincial Occupational Health and Safety legislation already says that employers have an obligation to train workers about the hazardous materials used in the workplace.

Sir Sandford Fleming College will be offering a course in W.H.M.I.S. (Work Hazardous Materials Information System) as follows:

DATES: Tuesday & Wednesday, November 2 & 3, 1993

TIME: 6 p.m. to 10 p.m.

LOCATION: S.S.F.C. Norman A. Sisco Centre

INSTRUCTOR: Pat Hogan

FEE: $61.40 (includes $9 material fee)
For further information or to register, call 457-1680. 10C
